Dear Charles,

So sorry about the silence. Yes, we were dreadfully upset to hear about poor Gerald. He had a stroke while he was away and he was paralysed down one side but seemed very cheerful and was looking forward to coming back to the island - and now this awful news. Still, don't you think it was the way he would have wished; sailing the high seas, ever the romantic and adventurous old "pirate"? It won't take long for his name to become a legend.

I have been having a pretty awful time myself over the past few months. My mother had been very ill for three years and she died just four weeks before Gerald. I still feel shattered but tears and Grief are as essential a part of the Balance of Magick as Joy and Laughter so we must learn to accept these things with understanding.

The long promised painting is enclosed herewith. Don't give it away unless it is to someone who is really worth it because it took weeks to paint.

Blessed be!

Margaret.
